

TIM BOWEN

Tim is the former worldwide COO of Sony Music overseeing all aspects of the music company's operations.

He has 30 years' experience in the business having started his career as a lawyer representing artists, writers and producers.

His global responsibilities, which included a major merger, covered production, marketing, distribution and management responsibilities in over thirty countries around the world. Shifting music consumption patterns dictated the need to change and Tim adapted the business by introducing new music related business opportunities, including music television formats.

During his career, Tim has always been committed to the major technological changes that have dominated the music and media industries and also to the development of the creative and executive talent which will lead the way into the future. To this end he has continued to support and advise those, not only in the music industry, but in all areas of management and leadership, sharing his years of experience.

Today, he co-owns an Artist development company, developing and managing the careers of young artists, writers and producers, and is also involved in the growth of new media and tech start-ups.

Tim is married with three children and three grandchildren.

He is a keen cyclist, walker, and committed golfer.
